Northwest Children's Fund site visits: More valuable than words can describe

A thick stack of grant applications—for the Northwest Children's Fund, this is where the process of ending the cycle of child abuse and neglect begins. During the initial application review, our Grants Committee spends hours pouring over requests, whittling down the stack little by little. When no more details can be gleaned from the paperwork, our Board members team up and head out for site visits. These face-to-face meetings give us a truer sense of each grant-seeking organization, and reveal the level of passion and thought each has put into its proposed program.

For example, when NWCF Board members visited Northwest Institute for Children & Families, we learned more about an innovative program that uses the "Family Group Conferencing" concept to move foster kids toward legal and emotional permanency by connecting them with supportive relatives. We knew the process of locating relatives was complicated, but we didn't fully comprehend the complexities and costs until we spoke to the people who were confronting this challenge on a daily basis.

"It takes considerable time and energy to locate family that is willing to step up and play a role in the lives of these kids," Board member Debra Dahlen explains. "But that's just the beginning. If the child is in Seattle, and the family is in Chicago, you've got to work within the legal parameters of both the State of Washington and the State of Illinois. It's a highly complicated process. But NICF has thought it through. They're making it work, and the impact is amazing. They're giving these kids a family—a lifelong network of support so they don't have to feel so lost in this world."

Similarly, while visiting SafeFutures Youth Center, Board members were amazed at the inroads staff members were making with Seattle-area youth involved with gangs and/or the juvenile justice system. "Visiting Safe Futures was a real eye-opener for me," recalls Board member, Alicia Gold. "The staff's understanding of the inner workings of Seattle-area gangs was amazing. They knew the leaders, and they knew how to earn the trust and respect of these kids. They were actually managing to get these teenagers to open up and recognize that they had opportunities and potential outside of the gang. This organization is truly making a difference—one life at a time."

These are just a couple of examples of how site visits bring NWCF and its donors closer to the organizations they serve. This past year, Board members visited scores of non-profit agencies before awarding a total of more than $850,000 in grants to 65 carefully considered programs. By meeting face-to-face with the people behind the programs—and often seeing the children whose lives are being changed—we're able to fill in the blanks and see what words on an application simply can't convey.

NWCF's site visits are the "value added" that we give our donors—helping them to direct their giving to programs that are making a visible difference in the child welfare landscape. In the end, we find that the grant applicants that win out are the ones that have thought their plans through most thoroughly. Like NWCF's donors, these organizations understand the importance of looking deeper in order to effectively bring hope to children in need.

NWCF golf tournament hits a fundraising hole-in-one!

On Friday, September 21, 2007, over 140 club-wielding philanthropists arrived at Trilogy Golf Club at Redmond Ridge for the Northwest Children's Fund Golf Classic, presented by F5 Networks. The event, hosted by former Mariners pitcher Jeff Nelson, was a terrific success, raising an unprecedented $68,000 for Northwest Children's Fund.

Golfers who had played in the NWCF Golf Classic in past years were thrilled to see the tournament resurrected after a three-year hiatus.

"It was a great day," enthused Nelson. "The turnout was excellent. Gary Locke and Edgar Martinez came out—along with a whole lot of supporters and sunshine. It was awesome. I can't wait to do it again."

Thank you, Nellie!

Host, Jeff Nelson, welcomes golfers to the tournament.

NWCF supporter, Peter Renner, walks the course.

October 2007

Dear Friends:

On behalf of the children and families whose lives you've changed, thank you for your commitment to Northwest Children's Fund. Once again last year, we were able to distribute more dollars than ever to agencies on the front lines of our collective fight to give our community's most vulnerable children the security and hope that they deserve.

During the 2006-2007 fiscal year, your compassionate generosity, combined with NWCF's model of effective and involved grantmaking, enabled us to:

- Distribute over $850,000 in grants to 65 powerful and deserving programs for at-risk children and families.

- Raise an amazing $478,000 through our Annual Giving Campaign, and net a record-breaking $378,000 at our dinner auction.

- Pass 100% of donor dollars directly to grants by having Board members and corporate sponsors cover all of NWCF's operating expenses.

NWCF's 23rd year is off to a roaring start, having kicked off with a delightful day of sun and fun at the 2007 Northwest Children's Fund Golf Classic, presented by F5 Networks and hosted by Jeff Nelson. Our Board members are now gearing up for another intensive and strategic grant review cycle, even as they begin planning next spring's delightful auction gala.

Please turn the page and read about all the innovative and effective programs you supported this past year through your partnership with Northwest Children's Fund.

Thank you for the trust you place in us to invest your gifts wisely. We look forward to another year of working with you to end the cycle of child abuse and neglect.

Respectfully,

Victoria Peattie Helm

Investing in the future

Northwest Children's Fund would like to thank the title sponsor of the 2007 NWCF Auction & Dinner, The Abelman Group/Merrill Lynch. Nina Abelman and her team of financial advisors provide full-service financial planning and portfolio management services, including advising clients on family foundations, donor-advised funds, and other philanthropic trusts.

With the wealth created in the 90s, more and more people are looking for smart, effective ways to lend financial support to those in need. Beyond writing a check or volunteering personal time, investors are wanting to incorporate charitable giving into their overall financial plan in a more strategic manner. The Abelman Group has worked with heirs of several Fortune 500 families and has been recognized as a top money manager by Washington CEO magazine, Puget Sound Business Journal and Research Magazine's Winner's Circle.
